Westchester County Department of Corrections selects Primonics' Televisit Corrections solution

Televisit Corrections allows for instant and secure video conferencing between prison inmates and county officers.

Montreal, Canada, March 2, 2009 – Primonics(2006) Inc, a leading software manufacturer and systems integrator , today announced that the Department of Corrections for Westchester County in New York state has successfully deployed Primonics' Televisit Corrections system.

Westchester County Department of Corrections selected Primonics' Televisit system to reduce the need for physical visits to the jail which provided a way of reducing costs for the county and the state.

Sgt. Don Smith, Technical services supervisor said, "Its all part of Westchester County's efforts to use technology to save money and improve efficiency and security." County officers like bail expeditors and probation officers don't have to visit the jail. It saves on the cost of transportation and of correction officers to take the prisoners in and out of the housing locations. The system allows the county officers and inmates to see and hear each other. The county projects that using Televisit corrections will save about $300,000 a year."

Dave Hinse, VP for Primonics said, "Our hardened terminals and secure network allow bail expeditors, probation officers, parole officers, attorneys to securely communicate with an inmate directly in their housing unit from anywhere an internet connection is available. Our open architecture allows the terminals to not only provide video visitation but also acts as an electronic billboard that provides inmates controlled access to information such as court appearances, sick calls as well as provides a way to order commissary."
